It was a god who had stirred her to do the awful act she did, and never before had she in her heart of hearts this terrifying wildness, the beginning of all suffering.

For one woman's sake, one act of love, these hunted Helen down and threw thousands of lives away.

Their general
—clever man—

in the name of a vile woman he cut his darling down, gave up for a brother the sweetness of children in his house, all to bring back that brother's wife, a woman who went of her free will, not caught in constraint of violence.
